Mockup Review - Bauhaus Microsite (Mockup A)
Designer: Sarah Park

What Works

- The colors, shapes and font really feel like the Bauhaus.
- The hero image is eye-catching, and you can tell what the site is about right away.
- The homepage is easy to follow, and the sections match the nav.
- I like that each button has its own color, so it feels like one system.
- The old black-and-white photos make it feel more real and historical.
- The mobile version stacks in an order that makes sense.

Concerns

- At first glance, I'm not sure what kind of site this is or who it's for.
- History gets a lot more space than the other two sections, and I'm not sure if that's on purpose.
- Some of the lines feel a little random, and one goes off the edge on mobile.
- The black and yellow bars only show up once, so I'm not sure what they mean.
- The body text looks thin and might be hard to read, especially on a phone.
- The photos don't have captions, so people might not know who or what they're looking at.
